

FACTS ABOUT SERIES

FACTS ABOUT FOXES &
Deer

→ Sue Stuever ←

THE GOOD AND THE BEAUTIFUL LIBRARY

With long noses and perky ears, foxes live in many parts of the world, often in places with lots of trees.

Some foxes live in hills,
grasslands, or very dry
sand.

The home of a fox family
is a snug den or burrow.

Foxes are smart and sly. They can make homes in many places, eat many foods, and are clever hunters.

Foxes eat what they can find in the places
they live.

Foxes mostly eat meat.
Their teeth are sharp so that they can bite into prey.

There are forty kinds of deer, but only two kinds live in the US: white-tailed deer and mule deer.

Can you see why this deer is called white-tailed?

Deer can have one or two babies. Having three babies, or triplets, is not as common.

A baby deer is called a fawn. Fawns have white spots that go in lines down their backs.

A fawn's spots help it blend in and hide.

When a fawn is born, its mother licks
it clean.

FACTS ABOUT

Foxes &

Deer

Jump into the wonderful world of foxes and deer with these beautiful images and fun facts! Young readers can gain confidence as they read on their own about the antlers on deer, how foxes care for their babies, and more. Facts About Foxes and Deer is created for children reading at Level 2A with a carefully selected set of challenge words to stretch their skills.

